Abstract: The profile differences of zinc, copper, and nickel contents in forest podzolic soils on South-Podlasie Lowland were studied. Their considerable differentiation was found. Contents and differentiation of analyzed heavy metals in studied soil horizons were determined by: parents rock and soil-forming processes (mainly podzolization) characteristic for those soils.